

Director of Community Development
Sewanee: The University of the South

The University of the South: Sewanee is looking for a Director of Community Development in its Office of Civic Engagement. The director of community development is an innovative joint position between the University of the South, through its Office of Civic Engagement (OCE) and the South Cumberland Community Fund (SCCF).

Reporting both to the Director of Civic Engagement and the Chair of the SSCF board, the director is responsible for overseeing the partnership's local-regional community development initiatives, which seeks to promote the well-being of the communities of the South Cumberland Plateau. Working with the community to develop local strategies aligned to state and regional development goals, the director oversees OCE-SCCF joint community development programs: grantmaking, the AmeriCorps VISTA program, and non-profit capacity building. The director collaborates with faculty to develop courses and research that support the partnership's community development goals and teaches and administers the student-run philanthropy program.